

RICH AMERICAN CAUSES SCANDAL IN THE PEERAGE

Gift of $1,000,000 Diamonds Results in Separation of Noble Pair.

MAY SUE FOR DIVORCE.

Co-respondent, if Named, Would Be Wealthy Holder of Real Estate Here.

PARIS, Nov. 18.—Scandal has been at a pause in the gossip concerning the Marborough scandal, since a rumor that an Earl who takes for his title the name of a county in the north of England, and his Countess, one of the most beautiful and aristocratic women of the Empire, are to separate by agreement.

The gift by one of the world's richest men, whose income from New York real estate is colossal, of jewels worth more than $1,000,000 to the fair Countess is said to have awakened the Earl to the facts. His name is as great as that of the family of the Duchess of Marlborough. While at first a divorce was insisted upon by the Earl, it is now believed that a satisfactory settlement has been reached, a settlement which will not seriously embarrass the man who was to have been named as respondent.

DRAW INCOME FROM NEW YORK.

He who was to have been made co-respondent in this newest scandal has been a widower for some years, and draws a tremendous income from real estate in New York, and his investments in London. Both his children have married within recent years, and both matches, which have turned out most happily, apparently, were made against his wishes.

The Earl and the Countess have married recently, and have four children. For the last two years she has been residing near the millionaire's mansion—but recently, since Joseph became so severe, she gave that up, and is now at a quiet watering place.

Brother Married Actress.

An English peer who has visited New York is the brother of the Countess with whom gossip is dealing at the moment. Lacking money, he had sought to retrieve his vanished fortune by a bold and indeed more risky than specious venture. The Countess, however, a young woman whose figure and voice were much admired on the New York stage,

Splendid jewels, which were strange to him, first awakened the peer's suspicion. It is said, "The Countess indirectly wore diamonds worth $1,250,000, which had been given her at the annual ball of her husband's county, of which, of course, she was a patroness. As the peer is not rich, it is impossible for his wife to buy such gems."

He questioned her. He angrily demanded an explanation.

The American divorce just obtained by Lady Angela Forbes is another matter of gossip.

The Lord Clair Erskine family, of which Lady Angela is the youngest member, are always before the public, usually because of their marital relations.

Lord Roslyn is the present head of the family. The story of his various affairs of the heart, winding up in marrying Anna Robinson, a New York actress, would make an entertaining volume. Lady Angela Forbes is his younger sister.

Very Beautiful Countess.

His second wife, the Countess of Westmorland, a very beautiful woman, was some few years ago, when gossip was busy with his name, the subject of a story in the English papers. Her husband, in the newspapers, warning everybody that he would not be responsible for any debt she might incur. The demands. She and the Earl have had four children.

The other and eldest sister is the Duchess of Atherton, Socialist and generally unconventional aristocrat.

DOG SCARES CROWD OF SCHOOL CHILDREN.

Injures Young Albert Brill in the Bronx—Shot by Policeman.

A mournful dog was shot to death the day after he had frightened a crowd of children at Public School No. 20, Fox Avenue and One Hundred and Sixty-seventh street. The dog appeared as the children were assembling for the afternoon session. His snapping drove them in flight to the halls and doorways.

Albert Brill, of No. 1140 Fox Avenue, wasn't quick enough, and the dog knocked him down, tearing his clothes. The cries of the children attracted Police Officer — the Bronx police station. The dog ran as the policeman appeared, and a five-block chase followed, a bullet finally ending the dog's life in front of No. 1140 Fox Street.

CHEWED UP BY BEAR ON STARIN LINE PIER.

Second Trial of Little Walter Mallory's Suit for $50,000 Damages Is Begun.

Walter R. Mallory restrained his tears with an effort to-day when he told a jury before Justice Bischoff in the Supreme Court how, one day in 1902, when he was only seven years old, one of Mrs. Paul Starin's cute little baby Rustin bears reached out of his cage on the Starin line pier in New Haven and chewed up his foot.

The boy's father sued John H. Starin for $50,000 damages for the crushing of Walter, and got a $10,000 verdict. This was set aside by the higher court, and to-day a second trial of the case was begun.

FRENCH PRINCE TAKES OUT HIS "FIRST PAPERS"

"I Want To Live Under Old Glory," Says
R. de Broglie.

When Dan O'Reilly led a tall, slender young Frenchman before John Loes in the Naturalization Bureau to-day he was told to take him to the Federal Court, as the State court was out of order.

The lawyer and his charges went immediately to the Naturalization Bureau, Lewis Donovan in the Elgin Building, and there it developed that the aspirant for citizenship was the nephew of Prince Robert de Broglie.

The young Prince married a girl who was not liked by his father, Prince Amadeo de Broglie, first in 1891, and then in Chicago. They have a son, and the purpose of the young Prince in becoming a citizen is to establish the legitimacy of his marriage and his baby, even in France. Mr. O'Reilly said.

Clerk Donovan was staggered when he answered his first question, "What is your name?" the applicant replied, "Prince Robert de Broglie."

He is the son of Prince Amadeo de Broglie, of the kingdom of France.

"No, the Kingdom of France. The Republic does not confer titles of nobility."

"Asked why he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Because I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want to become an American citizen; I want to vote, and I want to live under this flag."

"That's the best answer I ever got to that question," said Clerk Donovan, "but I'm afraid that you may be disappointed in this country. At the time I am any other American will address you by that title, hold up your high hand, and the prince formally renounced allegiance to all powers, princes and potentates." The Kingdom of France, particularly, and that stops the rather formal phrase.

Asked if he wanted to become a citizen of the United States, the Prince said:

"Yes, I want